STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

No. LXIX.

Washington, Feb. 19, 1834.—I had a chat yesterday, with an officer of the Navy, about Gov. Woodbury. The gentleman had been in the service thirteen years—and he said that those who had served twice this time, allowed that the present Secretary was the most able, the most just, the most impartial, of any they had ever known at the head of this Department.

I was highly gratified to hear such commendation from such a source. My informant further added, that many who, under other Secretaries, had been in the habit of enjoying favors and privileges, expected the like immunities from Gov. Woodbury; but though disappointed, they dared not say he was unjust. He orders the officers to important, or unimportant—desirable or undesirable stations, according to their relative terms of service, and their merits; and so well acquainted is he with both in all their details, that no one presumes to complain of his lot, or dispute the justice of it. He never seeks popularity—but lets it seek him. The President, I understand, has perfect confidence in his judgment, and firmness; and no one ever presumed to question his talent, any more than his integrity—proofs of which, as a Chief Magistrate of his native State, and an officer of the National Cabinet, have long since placed both beyond question.

I made an allusion, a few days since, to rumors of "resignation." I believe it was only "a weak invention of the enemy." I did not give credit enough to them to justify me for repeating them. I believe they were entirely groundless; and know that they now no longer claim any consideration.

The Spring I believe is determined to visit us soon, and abide with us. It has made a few flying calls in the shape of sunny days and moonlight evenings; but interspersed with a modicum of hanging and drowning weather. About the first of March, I look, that the few ragged clouds that winter has stationed here should march to the tune of "Over the hills and far away." If they don't, I shall try to "distress" them. I am determined to have no more winter after the first of March. "I take the responsibility on myself" to remove their "deposits."

Judge Wilkins concluded his speech to-day, which I thought was concluded yesterday.—This is the fourth day he has occupied the floor. Though he may be on our side, I must say, I think he has occupied too much time. Mr. Rives delivered one of the ablest speeches made this session, in one day; Mr. Grundy and Mr. Forsyth indeed occupied two days each; but theirs were masterly arguments, and could not have been crowded into less space or less time. Judge Wilkins, however, is peculiarly situated; he found himself obliged perhaps to tread over a wider space than the Senators from Tennessee and Georgia; but nevertheless, I think he should have used more expedition.

The House have been occupied on the appropriation Bill for Fortifications. Every body that speaks at all spoke on this subject. "Interest is the great sentiment," as Sterne says; and when appropriations of money (cash is virtue) are to be made, every man is patriotic and eloquent. The question on passing the bill was not taken; the debate will be continued to-morrow, and perhaps another day.

The Nullifiers picked up their ears, and neighed and snorted against appropriations for fortifications, as if they "smelt the war afar off." Mr. McDuffie began at first "roaring as mild as a sucking dove;" but he ended with a bellowing like a bull of Bushian, and burying his knuckles in his mahogany desk by way of emphasis;—he had his gloves on, however,—for he don't trust his naked hands to enforce his emphasis upon the mahogany.

Among others, Gen. Vance of Ohio spoke; a man of good sense, of brief speech, and logical argument. I had not before heard him; I was much pleased with his manner, and his matter. And here endeth this chapter.

REIS EFFENDI.

Washington, Feb. 20, 1834.—Congress and the Supreme Court adjourned to-day to attend the funeral of Mr. Wirt, whose remains were entombed in the Congressional Cemetery.—This was contrary to the wishes of his family, but in accordance with the impetuosity of the Bar and the request of the Court. His case establishes a precedent, namely, of burying distinguished members of the Bar of the Supreme Court in the National Cemetery. Mr. Pinekey was a member of the Senate when he died here, and buried at the public expense; Mr. Wirt was not, but his funeral was attended by a numerous concourse, who paid him all that respect due to his eminent talents, his distinguished virtues, and his well earned fame.

It is contemplated by the Bar, I understand, to erect a monument to his memory. No man is better entitled to such a mark of respect from his fraternity; for exalted talents have been rarely allied with such exalted virtues.

The Court and Bar will wear the usual badge of mourning for him during the remainder of the session; and I understand an Eulogy is to be delivered by a distinguished gentleman of the profession. Who it is, I know not. I could wish the duty to be assigned to Mr. Webster. For such an occasion, I believe even partisans must allow, that he is pre-eminently qualified, and would leave every rival immeasurably behind. I recollect to have been told some years since, that the first distinguished display he made of his talents when at college, was an eulogy on the death of a class-mate. On whomsoever that duty may devolve, I shall endeavor to be present on the occasion; and till then, I must mingle again in the bustle of busy life, to call a few flowers from this great political hot-bed, from which politicians, like the bees of Trebizond,

Draw venom forth that drives men mad.

It has been a fine sunny day, to-day; but the streets are ankle deep in mud. Nothing is more deleterious and deceptive than such weather; it is the breeder of all mortal complaints. For myself, I had much rather see clouds when I must deal with mud, than sunshine. The sun draws up the vapours; and if you do not feel the ill effects at the moment, you will be sure to suffer for it before the next morning. I have invariably felt languid and ill after a sunny and muddy day, and have often been reminded of Shakspeare's sentiment which he applied on another occasion, though it is not applicable to this:

It is the sunny day brings forth the adder; And that craves wary walking.

As nothing in particular is the order of the day with me, I will recur to a reminiscence to eke out my glimpses. While sitting in the Ladies' Gallery, on Tuesday at the time the previous question was before the House, I was highly amused by a tall, lank, long-faced, white-batted Count Fatham, with a tremendous weeper on his left arm, who took a seat, and crossed his legs aside of me, taking from a large purple leather reticule, hanging on his left arm, a written document with a blank back, upon which, after borrowing a pencil, he began to indorse doggerels. After he had discounted some dozen false rhymes, and his pencil had begun to grow dull, he paused, and thrusting his hand into his breeches pocket, drew out a spring knife of about nine inches haft, and the blade the same length. When he opened it—I forgot to mention that Doggerel was evidently either boozey or crazy,—when he opened it, there was a general opening among the ladies from right to left! which made Doggerel apprehend he had missed a figure. He was about to nib his pencil with this delicate piece of mechanism a foot and a half long, but seeing that the crowd made way for him, he embraced the opportunity to shut his knife, and honored me with craving the loan of mine. I handed him a small pearl penknife, at which he seemed so much astonished, I thought he would never mend his pencil; however, he went through with the operation, returned it, and resumed his rhymes again. After writing about two dozen miserable lines, not any two of which were even allowable rhymes, he bored me with his inspirations. Whether Doggerel was drunk or crazy, I thought it best to be civil to him. I recollected his spring knife of eighteen inches; his countenance of "distress," and some obscure groans he had uttered about the removal of the deposits; and moreover I called to mind the lunatic, and Gen. Cadwallader, who only saved his life by politeness; so I perused very gravely Doggerel's lucubrations, consisting of a Hudibrastic Phillipe against the Speaker. The author then passed his first canto to several ladies in front of him; and when they saw the author in person, they did not dare do less than read his rhymes, and affect to be pleased at them. He figured round in this style for half an hour; and with such a savage gravity of countenance, that nobody dared to laugh, though they were all ready to split with laughter. But enough of this.

The Senate, yesterday, had two petitions or memorials presented to them from Pennsylvania—one by the opposition, and the other by the administration party; but both in such offensive terms, that they laid them on the table. There was a good deal of debate about them; but Mr. Poindexter finally settled the matter, by saying, that the Senate had only the same language sent back to them which they had before uttered. He thought they had no right to complain.

In excellent keeping.—During the late war the dominant party in the Legislature of this State, which is the same now in power here "Resolved that it was unbecoming a moral and religious people to rejoice in the victories of our country" over the English.

The leading organ of the Nullifiers, of the 19th inst. who are the allies of the Massachusetts politicians above-named, contains the following paragraphs upon the battle of New Orleans, which indicates as much English feeling as the Massachusetts resolves did. It is truly worthy the advocates of the British Bank and the British Bank party.

"Three thousand were laid dead on the field of slaughter, on one side, [the English] and only seven were killed in fight on the other" [the Americans].

"And yet, it was this slaughter of the 8th of January that made Gen. Jackson what he is, that enabled him to ascend on the steps of popular favour, and to trample on the free institutions of America! It cannot be said of him

"—his crimes confined, Forbade to wage through slaughter to a throne, And shut the gates of mercy on mankind."

"No—through blood and slaughter he has waded to the highest post of honor in the gift of a free people, and the result has fully corresponded with the mode of advancement."

What true-hearted American could reproach a patriot for slaughtering an invading enemy, come to violate the "beauty" and seize upon the "booty" of the country? We may expect anathemas upon them from those bought with British gold, and fed with the gold of the British Bank,—from the Benedict Arnolds of the country—but from no man possessing the heart and feelings of an American or patriot, will such sentiments gain countenance.

New Bedford and the Money Pressure.—There have been two or more "fac simile" meetings in that town. At one of their recent Biddle meetings, a memorial was presented, and a vote passed, as we are informed, to report the names of all persons, who could not sign it, to an adjourned meeting—THIS WAS FOR THE PURPOSE OF INTIMIDATION.—One man, who declined signing, was threatened with injury to his business. This is about equal to the old gag law times of the elder Adams. But we would ask these "supple tools" of King Biddle, whether their master does not relieve from his marble palace in Philadelphia, in consequence of their obsequious obedience. The arrant folly and bitter rancor of these people, we do not mean all the people of New Bedford, but only those concerned in the meeting, and who approve of their doings, are calculated to deprive them of much sympathy for their pecuniary trouble. It is a notorious fact, that their difficulties are mainly owing to immense overtrading, and they might with as much truth, charge them upon the conduct of the Man in the Moon, as upon the removal of the deposits.

We have heard a good story, illustrative of the trafficking character of the New Bedford people, and of the illusive nature of some of their profits. A good old lady of that town had two sons, aged 10 and 12 years, who were, she said, such real New Bedforders, though she said it, who had not ought to say it, that when shut up in a close room an hour together, they would make five dollars profit apiece in swapping jackets with each other!

The Branch Bank, at Baltimore, has followed the noble example of the Branch at Louisville, and refused, by a formal vote to obey the order of the Mother Bank for curtailment. The Directors have done themselves honor, by thus refusing to be the agents of oppression and ruin to their townsmen and friends.—N. Y. Standard.

Why do not the Directors of the Boston Branch, instead of curtailing, unnecessarily, SEVEN HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS IN A SINGLE MONTH, take the independent stand which the interest of their fellow citizens demands?

The Committee appointed by the meeting at Faneuil Hall, on the 11th inst., have addressed a circular to the City Banks, in which they refer to the prevailing practice of charging a high rate of exchange on paper discounted, payable out of the city, and of paying discounts in checks on the south at a premium; and recommend that the rate of exchange on paper payable out of the city, shall be the same as is charged on such paper when received for collection; and if the proceeds be paid by a check on any other place, no premium shall be charged thereon. The Committee suggest the expediency of a Convention of delegates from the several banks, to deliberate upon the present state of the money market.

Instructions have been received at the Custom House, in this District, to refund to the importers of "Old Iron, (really coming under that denomination,)" from the 1st of October, 1830, to the 4th of March, 1833, the difference of 15 per cent, ad valorem, and the rate of duty charged during that time—it having been judiciously decided that 15 per cent. was the proper rate.

As Usual.—The New Bedford Working Men's Press is merged in the New Bedford Courier, one of the Organs of the Aristocracy—when will working-men study their true interest, stick to the Democratic party, that is the only true workingmen's party in the country.

POLICE COURT.

[Monday.]

James Mangin was charged with a complication of evil deeds. It was proved that he frequently got intoxicated, and was extremely abusive to his family. On one occasion, his wife sought refuge in a neighbor's parlor, into which he forcibly entered, and kicked her, though she had an infant child in her arms; he also locked his wife's chamber, to keep her out, and her neighbor provided her with a bed. This sanctuary Mangin also invaded, and assaulted her again by throwing a lamp of burning oil at her head. He also threatened her life, and she actually "lived in the fear of death." A female occupant of the house further added, that when "high, he had the impertinence to stand at her door [minus his unmentionables] for the space of 15 minutes by the clock." To these sundry charges, Mangin urged his matrimonial rights—"I have," said he, "a nice chamber of my own, with all the comforts of life in it, and I wanted her to come to it." There was one comfort, however, it appeared from the evidence, that his bed-chamber did not possess, viz.—a sober and sweet-tempered husband. When arrested, on Saturday night, in the height of his fury, he was suddenly calmed by the presence of watchmen. He made a flaming oration to them, and said—"I am intimately acquainted with your laws and institutions—and I admire them; but I suppose I have a right to do as I please in my own house." The Court reminded him that he had been fined, in July, $15, for a similar offence, and sentenced him to two months imprisonment in the House of Correction, where he will have an opportunity to become practically acquainted with one of the most important of our "public institutions." Upon searching Mangin, $50, in bills, was found upon him, which, however, he refused to have given up for the use of his family. This was after he had said he had no means of supporting them, and denying that he had any money in his possession.

James Ferguson was complained against as a common drunkard, and for battering one Gadland and wife. Ferguson "stipped into the room just at breakfast, and began his impertinence, and so the old woman just tuk the tongs, may be, and hit him a crack, and so that angered him, and said he would leave not at all till he was after killing somebody; and in the afternoon he came in and frightened her to death, and kilt two of the childer by carrying on." Other equally intelligent witnesses swore that Ferguson was "often drunk nor sober;" and the records of the Court contained previous convictions. Ferguson alleged that Gadland kept a gambling house; and that one evening they all got a quarrelling together, and broke a decanter, and tore G's coat; and that they wanted him to pay $2,000 towards repairing damages, but he thought, that as he had lost over $20, there, they ought not to have charged so much for the skirt of an old coat.—2 months, House of Correction.

Caspar Pendergras, whose head was the very reverse of the "bald first Caesar's," was charged with being a vagabond. Though a man is not allowed to be an evidence against himself, it must have puzzled the Court considerably to exclude the prima facie testimony of Caesar's personal appearance. For form sake two were examined, who knew no good of him, and he was mercifully despatched to the House of Correction for 2 months.

Vinal's Case.—We have received a communication respecting the case of Whiting Vinal, who has never been brought to trial, he having forfeited his bonds, ($600) by absconding. We have not room for it to-day, but may notice it at a future time, in connexion with the general subject of suppression of evidence, or "moral perjury," as distinguished from legal perjury.

Caspar Hauser, the young man whose imprisonment from childhood to the age of seventeen, has created so much excitement in Germany, was assassinated at Anspach, in December, by an individual to whom he inconsiderately granted an audience in the Palace Garden.

While travelling in New Hampshire a few days since, we unintentionally omitted to inform the driver that he "carried Caesar"—the consequence was, that he overturned the stage, to the utter ruin of our satin beaver, and the manifest marring of our "fair proportions."—We winked at the sin, because it was committed in ignorance.

The Marblehead Gazette relates that one of the guns, a two-pounder, of the privateer Free Mason, which blew up in the harbor of Marblehead, in the year 1779, was discovered and taken from the bottom, on Thursday last, in a good state of preservation. The charge being drawn, the powder was found to be good, after having laid at the bottom 55 years. It was to be used on Saturday, in firing the salute, in honor of the anniversary of Washington's birth day.—Trans.

THE GENERAL POST OFFICE.

Extracts from Mr Grundy's Speech in the U. S. Senate:—

"I had hoped, that in this debate, subjects unconnected with the matter under consideration would not have been introduced, and that the Post Office Department would have formed a distinct subject for examination, when all the information that could be obtained, would be fairly placed before the Senate. Standing in the relation I do to that department, after having witnessed the various assaults that have been made upon it, and now reiterated by the Senator from Maine, I should deem myself altogether inexcusable, were I not at this time to give to the Senate the views I entertain upon that subject. The report of the Postmaster General to the President communicated by him to Congress at the opening of the present session, stated the fact, that on the first of July, 1833, the department was indebted one hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars more than the whole amount of all the balances due to it from Postmasters, and those who had been postmasters up to that date: it moreover stated, that its current expenses were nearly eighty-six thousand dollars a year more than its current revenues, allowing the increase of postages to be in as great a ratio as they had been at any former period. This would bring the department at the close of the year 1833, indebted beyond the amount of all the balances due to it, two hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars. The Postmaster General has communicated to the Senate the names of the banks to which he is indebted and the amount due to each; from this it appears that he has borrowed from banks the sum of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and has overdrawn in banks in which the deposits of his department are made, to the amount of about fifty thousand dollars more, making his whole debt four hundred thousand dollars. Seeing, at the close of the year 1833, the debts of the department would amount to two hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars, it should not be a matter of surprise, that this debt should be due, and that the amount of loans and over drafts should exceed the amount of two hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars. It is rather a matter of surprise, that so small a loan as four hundred thousand dollars, which is but one hundred and sixty-two thousand dollars beyond the balance of debt, should be found sufficient to keep this great machinery in operation. The balances due to the Post Office Department are not like those due to an individual in winding up his business, which may be ascertained, collected, and the account closed; they are more like those of a merchant continually buying and selling; his accounts are always running—he is continually collecting—yet new balances to be collected are continually arising.

The revenue of the department arises from postages collected by more than ten thousand postmasters scattered over the whole Union, averaging from sixty to seventy dollars in three months from each; these balances must be collected, brought together in large sums, and transferred from one section of the country to another, before they can be paid to the persons entitled to them. In some parts of the country not one-half of the amount is collected in postages, that is required to be paid for transporting the mail through them, and collections must be made from other parts, and transferred to the proper places before they can be made available for the payment of these expenses. It will also happen, that among more than ten thousand collecting agents, some will always be found in default; money will often be withheld, and not unfrequently, till recovered by legal process. If every cent of money arising from postages was always paid over to the department the day it becomes due, and if it could also be transferred on that day in the exact proportion necessary to meet the demands of each contractor in the place where he expects to receive it, then it appears, from the reports of the department, the Postmaster General would have had occasion to borrow no more than the sum of two hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars. But taking into consideration the situation and circumstances under which the revenue of the department arises, it must appear to every one, that in the payment of seven hundred thousand dollars every three months, there must have been more than ordinary care in having so managed the affairs of the department, as to have anticipated its revenues to no greater amount than one hundred and sixty-two thousand dollars. The objections urged by gentlemen on the other side, are, that the Postmaster General has incurred expenses in transporting the mail beyond the revenue of his department, and has borrowed money to meet those expenses without authority. The first of these objections, the Postmaster General has explained in his annual report, which shows, that the method of keeping the accounts of the transportation of the mail was illusory. He was anxious to afford to the country all the mail facilities in his power, and the country has enjoyed the benefit of every cent that has been expended. He has procured the service of the transportation lower than what was formerly paid. Had he not been misled as stated in his report, both in the amount of his means, and in the current expenses of the department, he would not have transcended its revenues. He, however, found his department in debt before he was aware of the fact, and as soon as the deficiency was discovered, he adopted a system of retrenchment, which, in a reasonable time, will remedy the evil. I have already partly answered the second objection which has been made; the debt was incurred before the Postmaster General was aware of it, and he has taken effectual measures for its liquidation. If then there is an apology for the department being in debt, it certainly is more equitable to owe the money to banks, than to withhold it from individuals who have earned it, and who, without receiving it, would not have had the means of transporting the mail agreeably to their respective contracts. In fact, if the money had not been borrowed, and paid to the contractors, there would have been great danger that the transportation of the mail would have ceased in many instances. The loan from the banks was made upon the credit of the department alone, and not of the treasury; only two of the banks are among those selected by the treasury for its deposits, and with one of them, and that the one to which more than half of the whole debt is due, the loan was partially negotiated before the removal of the deposits was known to have been contemplated, and the whole transactions have been entirely unconnected with any treasury arrangements. The first loan appears to have been obtained before the discovery of any want of means to meet the whole current expenses of the department, and seems only to have been intended to anticipate a small part of the funds, then apparently due to the department. It is not a debt of the treasury, nor of a character to require any appropriation from it.

In the whole management of this department, the Postmaster General seems to have had but one object in view—the accommodation of the public; in this he has succeeded in an eminent degree; and although there has been an error committed in conducting the fiscal concerns of the department, which has led to too extensive public accommodations, the head of this department should stand exempted from censure. Whatever of error there is, has risen from a desire on his part to render his department serviceable and beneficial to the people, and to the great additional expense thrown upon the department by the large increase of post routes, exceeding twenty thousand miles imposed by the last Congress. This exposition I have deemed it my duty to make, in order that the public may have as correct a view of this subject as I am capable of giving, from an examination of all the documents, which have been furnished to the Senate from that department, and thereby prevent injustice from being done to a faithful public officer."
